A still from the 2012 Bollywood film Dishoom. When a hapless and low-paid actor is struck down by the same disease, all hell breaks loose and he must join a gang to find out who has been poisoning him and why. The movie Dishoom is on the lines of the TV show CSI. Once more a cop is on the case who investigates the most lethal of crimes in India. In this one, for a Hollywood film, the lead is played by an unknown actor. But can a mere performance win the hearts of critics and audiences? Apart from the all-round acting performance, the movie Dishoom is a brilliant presentation of an idea about the poverty of the lower middle class in India. The sequence in which the lead character commits suicide could be considered as a foreshadowing of the tale. We follow the cop through the journey, in which he makes a zigzag route to find the answers he seeks. The police officer may appear initially to be just another cop who makes a living from his investigations, but he has a heart. He can be seen to travel through an area where the slum dwellers live. A typical police officer can make friends with many of these people. He is initially suspicious of the dead man's family, but in the end the police commissioner makes a visit to them, and the movie ends with the policeman walking down a street in which life goes on as it does at the bottom of the social ladder. In that scene, a man sits on a motorcycle, the bike is parked at the end of a small, narrow street with hardly any traffic. On the motorcycle is a box, where it is possible to see a number of cadavers, mostly lying on one side. The truck is full of boxes, and a number of people pass by. We see that the people walking are mostly women, and the truck driver — who is obviously not doing very well financially — is on the move, so that the cadavers can be brought to the next place. The police are also in the picture. The whole street seems to be a place of decay, a place where poverty can be seen, with walls and buildings badly in need of repair. Masks are being placed on the heads of the dead bodies on the boxes. The fact that no one has money is also evident, as there are beggars in the area, and men and women are smoking and drinking 82157476af
